

It's All Coming Together – Intersections: Architecture and Poetry

Posted on June 1, 2011 by Ayla Lepine

This Friday and Saturday, the 3rd and 4th of June, Caroline Levitt and I will be co-convening Intersections: Architecture and Poetry. This conference at the Courtauld Institute of Art in London will bring architects, artists, poets and academics together for two days of art, film, poetry, and presentations that explore these fields in new ways. 20 papers will be given by experts from all over the world including academics Linda Walker, Margaret Graves, Ben Jacks, and Katie Faulkner, artist Agata Madejska, architecture partnership Tonkin Liu, and film-maker Marylou Tibaldo-Bongiorno. Alan Powers will offer a keynote address on Friday evening about W. H. Auden and Modernism in Britain. World Architecture News have featured Intersections in their weekly bulletin, and the Southbank Poetry Library have listed the event details, too. This international conference is a key moment in interdisciplinary and transnational approaches to the arts. Want to take part? Of course you do! There's still time to book a place through the Research Forum at the Courtauld. More details can be found here.

<https://heartchitecture.wordpress.com/2011/06/01/its-all-coming-together-intersections-architecture-and-poetry/>